DETAILED ACTION

Allowance

The following is an examiner's statement of reasons for allowance: In claim 1 to 20, Applicants claim a process for recovery of acid values from a gaseous mixture formed by catalytic oxidation of propylene with a source of dioxygen comprising the quenching of the gaseous mixture with aqueous liquid and contacting the aqueous liquid solution with an immiscible solvent comprising propyl acetate and cyclohexane from where the acid is recovery as described in the said claims. No prior art disclosing or suggesting the claimed instant process was found in the prior art. The closest art relevant to the instant invention was found in Sakamoto et al, EP 0861820 A3 (1998). Sakamoto discloses a process for recovery acrylic acid produced by the oxidation of propylene comprising contacting an acrylic acid gaseous mixture with water in order to form a liquid-aqueous solution and distilling the said mixture from an azeotropic solvent in order to isolate acrylic acid. However, Sakamoto's process does not require a separation of phases before the distillation or used as organic solvents a mixture comprising propyl acetate and cyclohexane as it is require in the instant invention.
